Roderick W. Smith is an experienced Linux user and system administrator. He's been using and administering Linux since 1994 when the 1.0.x kernel series was current. Rod has written for several computer magazines, most notably Linux Journal, and maintains several Web pages devoted to Linux, including pages devoted to fonts and printers under WordPerfect and ApplixWare, and another on creating Red Hat installation CDs. Linux Hardware Handbook by Rod Smith Linux Hardware Handbook shows you how to make purchasing and installation decisions concerning hardware for Linux computers. Don't wade through scattered documentation to determine what products work and what products don't—this book provides general guidance and information on what will help you and what to avoid.
